

Victoria Roberts

“Oh no, it is a sick chicken!”

How to gain the confidence to examine and treat her.

When: Thursday 27th April 2017

Where: VSSCo, Lisburn

Time: 7.15pm for an excellent buffet supper,

Lecture starts at 8pm

Victoria began training at Liverpool in 1995, starting teaching birds there in 1998 and gradually increased teaching time to include anatomy and physiology, dissection and handling of both birds and small furries, plus diseases and treatments. After graduation in 2000, She decided that being a small Animal locum would give her the flexibility to both concentrate on the animals and continue her other interests which include writing books on poultry, so her experiences of 45 years of breeding, showing and judging poultry can be passed on. Victoria set out to be a vet with the objective of improving the welfare of backyard poultry as it is a rising hobby, vets now needing this specialized information to cope with the increasing number of pet chickens that are presented to them, diseases and disorders often caused by owner ignorance. Her lecture circuit now includes vets, vet students, pet shops, chicken magazines and vet practices who invite interested clients to learn more about poultry.
